Megan scores big hit with Quentin Tarantino

A FORMER Westcountry student is striding into stardom by impressing Hollywood film-maker Quentin Tarantino with her latest production.

Megan Raney left Plymstock School, Plymouth, in 1995 and developed a passion for film-making in the USA.

Now living and working in California, she and her brother Colin Gray have formed a production company, The Sibs, which is rapidly gaining a high profile after their latest documentary, Freedom's Fury, was aired at the Barbican Theatre, in London.

The film, which is about events leading up to the Hungarian Revolution of 1956, was produced with Quentin Tarantino and Lucy Liu who believe it has a wider potential – it has already been shown at Robert De Niro's Tribeca Film Festival in New York.

Since then, the movie has earned The Sibs rave reviews and even the Order of the Knight's Cross on behalf of the Hungarian Republic.

Some people are suggesting the film could pick up an Oscar next month. The Sibs are now making their third documentary, Prisoners of Faith.
